

More Return.

A launch awareness campaign concept for the Nike Pegasus 42, Women's

Campaign Brief

Brand	Nike — Pegasus 42, Women's ($145, released April 9, 2026)
Goal	Launch awareness — position Pegasus 42 as the definitive comeback / return-to-running shoe
Audience	Women runners from daily trainers to time-strapped “getting back into it” runners
Budget (assumed)	$50,000+ over 10 weeks
Core insight	The shoe's real technical benefit — energy return — is also the emotional benefit runners already feel. Nobody has connected the two directly.

Product Grounding

The Pegasus 42 introduces a curved, full-length Air Zoom unit (replacing the previous segmented forefoot/heel pods), delivering at least 15% greater energy return than the Pegasus 41. ReactX foam in the midsole is 13% more responsive than earlier React foam, and the upper was redesigned with a roomier toe box and lighter, more breathable mesh. It launches in a strong range of women's colorways, including Light Bone, Chalk/Orange Pulse, White/Malachite, Lava Glow, and Lilac/Blue.

The Big Idea

“More Return.” takes the product's literal engineering story — energy return — and makes it emotional. Every mile gives back more than it costs: energy, clarity, momentum, confidence. For women balancing packed schedules, running is often the first thing cut from the day. This campaign reframes it as the highest-return thing they do for themselves, using the shoe's actual colorways as a way to name and personalize that return.

Strategy & Channels

- Interactive “Find Your Return” colorway quiz — matches runners to a real Pegasus 42 colorway and a named “return” (Power, Clarity, Momentum, Fire, Reset, Foundation) based on what they need from today's run.
- Nike Run Club integration — a post-run screen surfaces a personalized “your return today” stat, tying the app experience directly to the campaign line.
- “Return of the Day” social series — recurring content pairing a colorway with a mood and a one-line message.
- #MoreReturn UGC challenge — runners share what a specific run gave them back; lower cost, higher trust than paid media alone.
- Launch community runs in key cities, timed to colorway drops, building on Nike's existing run club network.
- OOH in major running cities — bold single-stat creative (“15% more return”) paired with real testimonials.

Execution: What Was Built

Two deliverables were prototyped for this concept:

- An interactive, clickable colorway-matching quiz (3 questions → return type + colorway reveal, with a shop CTA) — see “nike-pegasus-return-quiz.html”.
- A set of “Return of the Day” social post mockups plus sample #MoreReturn UGC cards — see “nike-pegasus-social-mockups.html”.

Timeline

Weeks	Phase	Focus
1–2	Build	Finalize creative, brief community/run club partners, launch quiz + NRC integration, set up tracking
3–4	Soft launch	Organic seeding, first community run events, small paid tests on creative
5–8	Full push	Scale paid spend behind winning creative and colorways; UGC challenge live in waves
9–10	Sustain	Retarget engaged users, keep organic cadence, reuse best UGC as paid social

Measurement

As a launch awareness campaign, success is measured beyond direct sales:

- Quiz completions and colorway-match → add-to-cart rate
- #MoreReturn submission volume and reach
- Nike Run Club engagement lift among women users during the campaign window
- Branded search lift for “Pegasus 42” (Google Trends / Search Console)
- Sell-through rate by colorway, to inform future launch allocation

Why This Fits the Brand

- Builds on a real, current product story (energy return) instead of a generic empowerment message
- Extends naturally into Nike's existing owned channels (Run Club, retail, community runs) rather than requiring new infrastructure
- UGC and community-run mechanics are lower-cost and higher-trust than paid media alone, useful for stretching a launch budget across a longer tail
- Colorway-driven personalization gives the campaign a reason to keep evolving content as new colorways release